"Comfort thy self: what comfort is in me
I have lived my life, and that which I have done
May He within himself make pure,
But then,
If that should it never see my
Face again,
Pray with my soul: have things are
Instructed by prayer
Then this world doth off, when the
Lest they arise
Rise like a forest fountain: for me might
And day."

Oh, how little they know what it means to do anything but repeat after others by rote, the range, the labor, the yearnings and misgivings of mind it costs to get the germ of an original idea — to dig it out of the hidden recesses of thought and emotion, and bring it half ashamed, struggling, deformed into the day — to give words and intelligible symbols to that which was never imagined or expressed before! It is as if the dumb should speak for the first time, as if things should stammer out their own meaning through imperfect organs of mere sense.
